Week 2 Homework

Last Lecture-

I thought the Last Lecture was a great listen. I was doing a decent amount of stuff today and didn't have the time to actually sit down and watch the whole video. BUT, I was able to find an audio version on spotify, so I just listened to that throughout my chores. How optimistic Randy is. And what a life that man has lived and continues to live! I loved the energy coming from him, and to be honest, when he mentioned his tumors, I thought this was just going to be another copy paste 'cancer talk' motivational speech. The types that are along the lines of "I do this with cancer and you're healthy so why don't you do it too", but it was the exact opposite for me. I like how he talked about his football dream, though it didn't completely happen. The lessons he learned through it were better than actually achieving the dream itself. Which can be said about a lot of the things us humans do, that part really spoke to me.

Learning Styles -

My learning style is predominantly auditory which I can totally see. Or, I guess hear! I've noticed though, visual is the best way things stick. Actually being able to watch someone do something and then have them almost guide me through what I have to do is the best way for me to excel into something. Sure, listening to how to do something I can do it well, but I feel like watching someone do something and teaching me through that way helps me expand what I can do with what they taught me.

Kahoot -

The kahoot link was expired, so it only showed the leaderboard for me :(I'm sorry for turning this in late.
